The Heinrich Zeller House, more commonly known as Fort Zeller, represents a remarkable transference of European architecture styles to America. Built by Heinrich Zeller (Henri Sellaire), the house is in reality a transplant from Zeller's native Alsace.

The Zeller House, constructed in 1743, was built into the bank over an everflowing spring. The stream from this spring still flows through an arch under the basement entrance. The house is basically a one and one-half story structure, although the gable end gives the appearance of being a two and one-half story structure. The exterior walls of the house are of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  foot thick, stucco covered limestone. The stone walls are carried only halfway up into the gables. Vertical siding is used from here to the peak of the roof. The high gable roof, presently tin, was originally covered with handmade beaver tail tiles of red clay. The roof has a wide sailing overhang with the first floor ceiling beams projecting beyond the wall.

The original fenestration of the house consisted of small tunnel-like square windows. These windows are framed by cut sandstone sills, posts, and lintels. Three such windows are located, one on each floor of the southwest gable. The northeast gable has but two such windows, one on each level. Small four pane windows are located in the peak of each gable. c. 1850 several larger windows were installed. Two of these six over six pane windows are located in the south facade and one above the basement entrance. Also, at this time, two small gable dormers were placed in the south slope of the roof.

The entranceways of the house are particularly interesting. The main entrance in the south facade has a carved sandstone frame which includes an armorial device in the keystone position. The door itself is but  $5\frac{1}{2}$  feet high, and is constructed of chamfered boards pegged in a herringbone design. The arched doorway to the basement is also constructed in this style, as is the rear door in the north facade. All doors are divided horizontally at the lock rail.

The interior of the house is divided into two areas by a 12 foot wide freestanding fireplace. The fireplace opens only into the long kitchen room. A simple stairway leads to the second floor from a corner of this room. The remaining room is divided into two rooms by an interior partition. The interior as a whole is crude and devoid of ornamentation. A fire early in this century destroyed some of the interior although the general features including the wattle and daub walls are still preserved.

The Zeller or Sellaire family fled the Alsatian region of France shortly after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. The Sellaire family castle still stands on a wooded crag north of Strasbourg. As with many other French Huguenots, the Zellers fled first to Holland. At the invitation of Queen Anne the family moved to England and shortly thereafter emigrated to America. Arriving in New York in 1710, the family settled in the Schoharie region of that state. In 1723 they moved to the present Mt. Aetna area of Lebanon County. The tract of land where the Zeller House is located was acquired from Thomas and Richard Penn The original log house built on the property is in 1743. no longer extant. Legend tells of the present houses construction in 1723 and that Heinrich Zeller only remodelled it in 1743. However, no documentation can be found to prove this earlier date.

Much local legend abounds about the Zeller House. Stories of its construction by Lady Clothide de Valois, Sellaire in 1723, of its heroic defense against savage Indians by a young girl, and of its various occupants form an integral part of the local folklore. However, the house derives its primary significance from its architecture. The house has not been seriously altered and still preserves most of its original appearance. Its Alsatian/Swiss appearance gives ample evidence of the persistence of European tradition among the original settlers of this area.

The property is presently well maintained and is operated as a small museum.
